Billing and payments documentation

Learn about the different components of your bill, and how you can view and manage those components.

Overview

Start here

Adding or editing a payment method

You can add a payment method to your account or update your account's existing payment method at any time.

Setting your billing email

Your account's billing email is where GitHub Enterprise Cloud sends receipts and other billing-related communication.

About per-user pricing

For organizations and enterprises, your bill begins with the number of licensed seats you choose.

Popular

Viewing the subscription and usage for your enterprise account

You can view the current subscription, license usage, invoices, payment history, and other billing information for your enterprise account.

Downgrading your account's plan

You can downgrade the plan for any type of account on GitHub.com at any time.

About billing for GitHub Actions

If you want to use GitHub Actions beyond the storage or minutes included in your account, you will be billed for additional usage.

About billing for GitHub Codespaces

Learn about the costs for using GitHub Codespaces, and the monthly usage quotas included with GitHub personal accounts.

Guides

How does upgrading or downgrading affect the billing process?

When you upgrade the subscription for your personal account or organization, changes are applied immediately. When you downgrade your subscription, changes are applied at the end of your current billing cycle.
